

Dear diary,

Today has been a great day. I feel very proud that I am the only animal in the world that produces food that humans can eat.

First thing this morning I carefully cleaned out and fed the baby bees in the hive. After that I carried on packing the pollen and nectar into cells.

I know that I help other plants grow by pollinating them. I fed on nectar and pollen today. Most of the pollen will be used as food for larvae.

Later in the day, we built the hive and I got to test my flying skills and speed outside of the hive. I flew so fast--probably close to 25K per hour!

Finally, I flew home sleepily and thought about what I will do tomorrow. I decided that I will pollinate the flowers, nearby fruits and vegetables tomorrow. Then, I will spend time building and protecting the hive with other workers- just as I do every other day. Today has been a great day. ZZZZZ.

Bobby the Bee.
